During the wholesale alienation of the public lands for the purpose of forming vast natural estates and barring settlement. We are now witnessing the application of a neck to commercial and industrial enterprises a tightness of the money market, expenditure by the unnecessary and unprofitable investment of capital in the purchase of land. We are now watching the gradual corruption of the political atmosphere by the subordination of public to private interests in connection with land transactions and the distribution of the spoil. We are becoming familiar with retrospective legislation for the wholesale surrender of public claims, and the chief explanation of all this is that there has been a worse failure of administration under the new law than under the old. The fault lies primarily in the law, which laid new duties upon the Government without provid-

The passing of the Act of 1875, with its special provisions for inquiry and inspection, as the first practical and broad recognition of duties that ought to have been recognised and fulfilled long before. But a great deal of the mischief had then been done, and the awakening which men took place was an awakening to the presence of work in arrears. From that time to this there has been an ineffectual struggle with these arrears, for the loss is ever accumulating. The numerical strength of the Lande Department has been increased

Under Mr. GARRETT alone, it has been shown, some four hundred persons were appointed, put, in a business of such magnitude and complication, with fresh transactions every day, there is an irresistible pressure on account of current work, and it has been found simply impossible to work off arrears with the force available. The chances are that, in these days of sponges and retrospection, unless some special effort be soon made, the difficulty will be met by sacrificing public interests in the great on the whole public ould be too costly and troublesome to assert men. And, as we are under responsible government, nobody will then be held responsible.

There ought, however, in justice to the public, to be some serious endeavours to prevent the adoption of so discreditable a conclusion. The present Assembly appears to be unwilling to disturb the foundation of the and Law. The more reason, then, is there or calmly and courageously facing the situation which that law has created. The colony now suffering from the defective administration of the new law as it was suffering from a similar cause (operating within narrower limits) under the old one. If the legislature is unwilling now to do what it did then, and change the law, the least that ought to do is to take measures to enforce vigorous and effective administration. There is a choice between two courses. The Government may be allowed to take things easily, with complications, disputes, and uncertainties ill multiply, and the heap of arrears accumulate, until it is shovelled up into the avenger's cart, and got rid of as a mass of storing rubbish. Or the Government may be pressed to do its duty, work off arrears, and keep them down in future at any cost, even at the cost of the money for which the debt and gold should be absorbed in the process. There is no intermediate course. The problem cannot be solved by affecting to ignore its existence. The leading politicians of the hour may say that they are not bound to solve it. But if it is left to solve itself, the country will suffer heavily, in money and in morals.

The first point of interest in the Report of the Council of Education for the year 1878, which we have already commented, is the consent to which the educational provisions of the Council are meeting the wants of the country. This is a matter capable of being admitted to almost mathematical demonstration, and it is well worth while to apply a test, from several points of view.

The fact most commonly relied on as proof of our educational progress, is the number of children enrolled in all our schools under the Council. The last report gives the number at 128,125, which is equal to 18 per cent. of the entire population of the colony at the close of the year. In Victoria, the last official report shows a gross enrolment in State schools equal to 27 per cent. of the entire population of that colony. This means that where we have one child enrolled out of every 54 inhabitants, Victoria has one child out of every 34 inhabitants. It is some satisfaction to know that the proportionate enrolment last year was higher than ever before in the history of the colony; but it is not satisfactory to be in this respect so far behind our neighbours across the Murray. In both cases the figures are uncorrected for multiple enrolments, and so far the comparison is fair. Further on it will be necessary to correct this gross enrolment by tolerably well ascertained data for the purpose of ascertaining the exact number of distinct children who were actually under instruction for some portion of the year.

Next, let us take the returns of average daily attendance. For the last and best arter of the year the Council report this at 60,529 which is equal to 83 per cent of the whole population of all ages at the same date. This also is higher by nearly half than ever was attained before. But in comparison with the progress made in other countries it is almost insignificant. In 1873 before the new Act came into operation, Victoria had a larger proportionate average attendance than we have now, and at the date of her last returns, the average attendance at day schools had risen to 184 per cent of the entire population. That is half as large again as our proportionate average attendance, which means that Victoria has more children in daily attendance where we

The two ratios found above can now be applied for the purpose of estimating the number of children of school age within the colony who are left outside our educational provisions. In Victoria it was found by actual enumeration that the gross enrolment had to be reduced by 10.8 per cent. to get the actual number of distinct children. Applying this ratio to our gross enrolment and we get 16,800 distinct children who were on the Unicef's books for at least one day in the year. What was the number of children of school age within the colony. Fortunately for our investigation there is definition of this term applicable to the
